SABERTOOTH KNIFE

The Sabertooth knife was developed by Jefferson Spivey after his 4,000-mile ocean-to-ocean horseback ride across the continent in 1968. Using his unique experience, he designed this knife as an ideal tool for wilderness survival and use by hunters, campers, mountain bikers, backpackers, fossil-digging paleontologists and military personnel. This super-sturdy survival knife is 12 3/4 inches overall and has a 7 1/2-inch flat-ground blade of chromoly tool steel that features a double row of biangular teeth on a sloping 5 1/4-inch spine. This sawtooth spine can actually cut through a 1 3/4-inch iron pipe with no damage to the teeth. The finger guard, integral with the blade, protects the finger while cutting and hacking so that this knife can do the job of hatchet, saw and knife. The knife is fitted with polymer handles in black, gray or brown and is shipped with a leather sheath and security strap.
